If you're starting to set the alarm now that kids are going back to school, you may have found on your Android phone that it's not setting any alarm off. There's a Reddit thread (opens in new tab) on the issue, while the app listing (opens in new tab) is full of reviews complaining that the clock app on Android isn't working correctly. Google has confirmed that a fix is on the way, but there's already another method to avoid this bug for now by using a different clock app as the default choice for setting alarms. Finding a new Clock appThe first step is checking whether Spotify is being used to play a music track when an alarm is set. If this is the case, remove the track from the alarm and use a default tone instead. This looks as though it's causing any app that uses an alarm clock to not ring when instructed. Make sure that your device is up to date on Android, then look to download a different alarm clock app. As the issue also involves the default Clock app from Google that's stopping an alarm from ringing, setting an alternative alarm app as the default choice will sidestep the issue. (Image credit: TechRadar) There's two apps that we recommend to be the default clock app. MB Alarm Clock (opens in new tab) and Simple Alarm Clock Free (opens in new tab) are great alternatives that give you the ability to set multiple alarms at once while being able to rename each of them, while setting which days they should go off. Once you've found the best alarm app, the final step will be to set it as the default for your device, but this will be done through Google's Assistant instead. Setting a new Clock app as the default Instead of going to Settings > Apps and Notifications > Default apps, it's a different approach for the clock app. Make sure the Google Assistant app is enabled, and ask the following: 'OK Google, Simple Alarm Clock Free, set alarm for 9am tomorrow.' (Image credit: Google) This changes the default clock app to Simple Alarm Clock Free, and you can set alarms as normal. While Android doesn't allow the ability to set a different clock app as the default, users have reported, us included, of this method working as expected. Here's everything you need to know about Android 12 If the alarm you set through the Clock app on your Samsung Android device is unreliable a software bug is likely the cause of the problem. To rid your device of such a bug please follow the steps below. Note: before following the below steps it's worth checking to make sure that the volume for the alarm you set isn't too low (bear in mind that you can set different volume levels for separate alarms). Clear the Clock app's data 1. From the Home screen touch Apps. 2. Touch Settings (you may need to swipe left or right to locate it first). 3. Touch Application Manager (you may need to scroll down or touch the More tab first to locate it). 4. Swipe left several times to see the All list of apps. 5. Touch Clock (scroll down to locate it: the apps are listed in alphabetical order). 6. Touch Clear data. 7. Go back to the Home screen, access the Clock app and then set an alarm to go off a couple of minutes from now. If the alarm goes off on time you've likely gotten rid of the bug. If not, proceed to the next section. Perform a software update Perform a software update by following the steps below (note that these steps may differ slightly for your specific smartphone or tablet): 1. From the Home screen touch Apps. 2. Touch Settings (you may need to swipe left or right to locate it first). 3. Touch About device (you may need to touch the More tab first). 4. Touch Software update. 5. Touch Update. 6. Go back to the Home screen, access the Clock app and then set an alarm to go off a couple of minutes from now. If the alarm goes off on time you've likely gotten rid of the bug. If not, proceed to the next section. Perform a factory reset Follow the steps below to perform a factory reset. 1. Back up all the media, text messages, etc that you wish to save. This can be done through Kies on your PC. A factory reset will wipe your phone clean, restoring the software to how it was when the device left the factory. 2. From the Home screen touch Settings. 3. Touch Back up and reset. 4. Touch Factory data reset. 5. Touch Reset device. 6. Go back to the Home screen, access the Clock app and then set an alarm to go off a couple of minutes from now. If the alarm goes off on time you've likely gotten rid of the bug. If not, your device may require an engineer's attention. Please click here to find the location and contact details of your nearest Samsung service centre or arrange to have your device examined by an expert. We use our smartphones to do more than just send and receive text messages and phone calls. Gone are those days. Smartphones are so integrated into our lives and can do so many tasks and functions, anything from ordering food to making banking transactions. One of the more basic functions our phones have that we use so often and sometimes overlook is telling the time. It is such a simple yet integral function of the smartphone. The clock app on the smartphone also allows its user to set up timers and alarms. Recently, users discovered that Android's native clock app alarm is not working. The bug is connected to a recent Google rolled out allowing phones running on Android 5 or newer to set up alarms that play music from Spotify instead of the provided tones. The feature should work for any Spotify user, with or without a premium subscription. However, users started to report that their clock app was failing to play alarm sounds. As more and more reports of the problem popped up, it was able to be deduced that the problem was from the Spotify integration. According to Google, they are working on a fix, said Screen Rant. The next update sent out would patch up the alarm clock bug. However, if you need a workaround right now, we've listed down ways to set up an alarm on your smartphone. Is it just me, or is the Android Clock app no longer sounding alarms during Do Not Disturb periods - even if Alarm is set to override? I mean, I don't mind the lay-ins but... — Flyfour (@flyfour) September 5, 2021 6 Steps to Get Your Android Clock Working Again and Set Up an Alarm 1. Check your Alarm settings to see whether Spotify is being used to play a music track when the alarm is set. Tech Radar suggested. If you find this to be the case, go ahead and remove the track from the alarm. Go ahead and choose a default tone. 2. Check if this fix worked by setting up an alarm in a close enough time frame with the default tone selected. Wait for the alarm to go off. 3. Make sure the Android OS is up to date. And be on the look out for the next update that will hopefully patch up the problem. 4. If the problem persists, it is best to look for an alternative alarm app as a temporary work around to this issue. It's like any other Alarm App but in order to turn the alarm off, I have to do complex Math Problems or scan a QR/Barcode of an item in my house. The item in my house is my multi vitamins located downstairs pic.twitter.com/FcDf6P3WHN — Ci (@oneilworld) October 6, 2020 Alternative Alarm Apps Alarmy is a well rated alarm clock app, Screen Rant said. It also has Spotify integration if that feature. Alarmy is one of the highest-rated alarms apps and also supports musical alarm. Tech Radar also suggests MB Alarm Clock and Simple Alarm Clock Free. Both are great alternatives that offer the user the ability to set multiple alarms at once as well as being able to rename each of them and set which days they should go off. 5. Once you have decided on an app, set it up as the default for your device. This can be done through the Google Assistant app. Tech Radar said. Make sure it is enabled and then ask the following: "OK Google, [App name] Simple Alarm Clock Free, set alarm for 9am tomorrow." 6. Confirm the action by selecting to complete the action using the selected app and then you can set the alarms as normal. This workaround should work well until Google has rolled out the patch. Related Article: What Is Logi Dock? Work-From-Home Setup Made Better by Logitech's New All-in-One Dock The alarm on my Samsung Note 3 makes no sound. Things that I've tried to resolve the issue: Ensure that the phone is not in silent mode. Ensure that bluetooth is not enabled, so the sound does not go to i.e. a headset. Ensure that all the volume sliders are up (Ring, Media, Messages, System). No task killer apps in use. The alarm's volume is set as high as possible and the Alarm Type is "sound". The alarm's sound is the default Samsung alarm sound Morning Flower. No location-, time-, or event-based applications such as Tasker, Llama, or IFTTT are installed. The setting Settings > Accessibility > Turn off all sounds is not set. In fact, other sounds (such as ringing) function as expected. I see that the alarm "goes off" in the sense that the screen shows an alarm event occurring which I can either close or put to sleep. However, no sound is produced. What else should I check? The phone is running the stock OS (Android KitKat 4.4.2) and is not rooted. Additional informations as per the comments: None of the alarm sounds play. I'm not sure where to find them outside the Alarm application. Additionally, custom sounds do not play either, even though I can play them outside the Alarm application. The Lollipop update has issues that I do not want to deal with, thus I intend on staying with 4.4 until the unrelated Lollipop issues are dealt with in a future 5.x update. I know of no special circumstances during which the alarm will sound. It hasn't made a peep in the few weeks that I've been trying to use it. I know that it did work when the phone was new (one year ago) but until recently I had no need to use the Alarm so I haven't used it in some time. I have tweaked just about every combination of variables, and nothing makes the alarm sound properly. However, the preview sound does play when selecting the alarm sound. I have not tried any other alarm apps. I do not install many applications on this device, and I will not go installing and uninstalling applications precariously, rather, I prefer to fix what is already installed on the device. When pressing the Volume Up key, the Alarm seems to stop. It is the same effect as selecting the end alarm function I have cleared the data from the Clock app. This removed all current alarms, and the new alarm rings! Please make this comment an answer so that I could accept it. 7
